

Attending the combined scan clinic

We have written this leaflet to give you some information about the combined ultrasound and paediatric clinic so you have more idea what to expect.

We understand how stressful this situation is for parents and it can be difficult to remember information you are given, so if possible please bring someone to support you at the appointment.

The purpose of this appointment is for your baby to be thoroughly examined in the presence of a consultant obstetrician (pregnancy doctor), an associate specialist in ultrasound (scan doctor) and a consultant neonatologist (baby doctor). This ensures good communication between the two different teams (maternity and paediatrics), and ensures that you will be given a proper explanation of what will happen before and directly after your baby is born. One of the screening midwives will also be present. She is there to liaise with other departments and is your point of contact if you need further information. As a lot of conditions we are seeing are unusual, we sometimes have junior doctors or trainee midwives there so that they can learn about them too.

It is always a good idea to write down any questions you may have beforehand and bring them with you to the appointment. The appointment will last about 30 minutes but this could be longer if the problem is particularly complex, or if it is difficult to get clear views on the scan. Sometimes, babies just won't co-operate, and we will have to give you another appointment to have another look.

Once the scan of your baby is finished, the neonatologist will discuss with you the plan of care for your baby once s/he has been born. A letter outlining this plan then goes into your hospital notes and a copy will be sent to you at home. A letter is also sent to your GP and community midwife to keep them informed. If necessary, another appointment will be made before you leave the hospital to attend the following combined clinic (they are held once a month). Otherwise, you will be seen in the hospital or community as appropriate.
